The writer at the request of J. McRae delivered food to the home of Steven and Phoenix. The writer and colleague C. Ponce knocked on the door and Steven answered. We went into the living room and the writer immediately smelled the strong odor of marijuana. Steve readily admitted to smoking marijuana, denied being "stoned" rather just "buzzed". The writer tried to engage a dialogue with Steve indicating that he has been drinking to the point of intoxication during the weekend and now his choice of substance has changed and under the influence is under the influence and still inappropriate. Steve reported that Phoenix was "upstairs sleeping" as well as his "sister". The writer advised that when we were standing on the front step as the window was open we heard a number of persons in the home. He insisted that it was just himself, his sister and [REDACTED], besides the very tall friend that just left.

Steven did not display any insight into the writer's concerns. The further into the conversation we got the more Steven became non co-operative. He stood sideways so the writer had to speak to his profile. His manner became flippant and the writer left advising that she would need to consult with a supervisor regarding his continued use of drugs/alcohol.

Phone call to Acting Supervisor Audrey Lumsden. The writer agreed it would be in the best interests of Phoenix to come into care. The writer advised the Winnipeg Police Services would be necessary.

Phone call to Winnipeg Police Services. We waited approximately 1.5 hours for a car and entered the home again at 6:24 pm. There were a number of young men in the home who all scattered out the back door. Prior to entering the home Constable 1818 advised that he had attended the home on an unrelated call yesterday and that a number of Indian Posse members were in the home and that he had difficulty arousing Steve who was laying on the couch. The constable also remarked that Steven "is really not a bad guy"

The writer had to address Steve a number of times and request his attention. Steve could not understand the severity of the situation ie., being under the influence all weekend with Phoenix being cared for by a number of people
